Ben Brazee Essay review #3, compare and contrast the ways in which economic development affected politics in Massachusetts and Virginia in the period from 1607 to 1750.

Virginia Economic Basics: In the colonial times, Virginia was a tobacco growing colony. It had the makings of the large cotton plantation owners and the poor yeoman farmers with a slave class below that, but was used for tobacco. Tobacco was grown through indentured servants and slaves working the fields, but as indentured servants were given freedom slaves replaced them. This led to larger slave populations in the south and the expansion of yeoman farmers and tobacco growers. The plantations were not the same as they were in the age of cotton, but there was still an upper class of rich land owners that dominated the political stage.

Massachusetts Economic Basics: Massachusetts was a shipping hub for the western hemisphere, particularly in the ports of Boston and later, New York (Acquired by the British in 1664). These colonies were used by the British to export their manufactured goods to the south Atlantic system; this led to a small manufacturing sector in the northeast itself before 1750. Shipbuilding, fishing and whaling were also staples of the New England/ Massachusetts economy, as was Triangle Trade (Food, lumber to the Caribbean, gold and oranges to Britain, Manufactured goods to Massachusetts Colonies).

How these relate to Social and Political Developments, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Bay colonies were more independent from Britain once they had their own manufacturing sphere started, hence why they were more separatist from the British Empire when the revolution began. This is evidenced by the way the Massachusetts shipping industry bypassed the Molasses Act of 1733, bribing and smuggling their profitable commerce with the West Indies. This is why most Separatists were in the North during the revolution. Massachusetts also found that lumber reserves for the king's navy were becoming an obstacle for the development for their own shipbuilding economy, which lead to more disregard of English law.

How these relate to Social and Political Developments, Virginia: Virginia would be less interested in a revolution inspired by freedom as they couldn't count on the revolution retaining slavery. The large amounts of indentured servants in Virginia became the large amounts of yeoman farmers. There was still a near aristocracy of rich planters who ran the government, but there was far more social mobility in America than there was anywhere else in the world (for white males).

Ways in which they were similar, ways in which they were different:

Similar:	Different:
Both sought new markets for their exports after	Virginia was dependent on slaves and a large lower
